The CV

10/09/2013

A summary of past and current work is available in the Experience page, to give an indication of what I do at work and my current research. This page provides some highlights. I also do a variety of freelance projects for web design and development. This site is one example. My CV is available below via Scribd (PDF). It includes work record, skills and experience, statement and full teaching history. Past work includes:

Senior Lecturer

I have considerable experience (ten years) teaching in the field of computing and digital media, and recently supervised a number of dissertations at undergraduate and postgraduate level at London Metropolitan university. I currently teach some module sessions at undergraduate and postgraduate level, at University of Malta.

Senior Blended Learning Facilitator

Development of the eLearning Matrix web resource using ExpressionEngine CMS, a complex category driven website offering multiple routes into content on technology enhanced learning techniques and resources. The site was built with Expression Engine, fully responsive, fully Open Graph integrated and offering other useful functionality for users, such as PDF or epub generation of any article for reading offline. An innovative feature was the 'Shortread' initiative, that enabled academics to email their article to be automatically published to the website directly. The resource was live between 2011-2015. I also advise on uses of technology in learning and teaching, and social media for teaching and learning.

Social Media & Content initiatives for Academics

Working with academics in the faculty of Social Sciences and Humanities at London Met to create and inspire news stories for sharing the learning and teaching experiences of the faculty. Inventing and running Mediabank, the media and communications student team on work placement or volunteer work project initiatives for content generation and sharing into social channels. We created vox pop video, motion graphics and image banks as authentic content – real stories about real people. For more info, see the Mediabank entry in the work section.

Freelance Projects

Netfarms.eu is my WordPress Multisite project, and I'm involved in providing people with custom build WordPress sites for personal portfolios and in learning and teaching. I've also developed several WordPress sites for small clients on the network, or larger sites on client hosted stand alone WordPress implementations.
